The Great Wall is regarded as China's most recognizable icon. No visit to Beijing is complete without a trip to the Great Wall. On arriving in Beijing, many people are surprised to discover that the Great Wall of China is not one continuous wall running the length of the country but is, in fact, made up of many small sections scattered across the northern parts of the country. It served to protect the Chinese heartland from the barbarian hordes of the north and though much is attributed to Emperor Qin Shi Huang (221-201 BC), in large part, it was built up during subsequent dynasties, most recently during the Ming Dynasty (1368-1644).

Badaling is the most popular section of Beijing's Great Wall. Constructed during the Ming Dynasty, Badaling underwent extensive reconstruction during the 1950s and 1980s, allowing visitors to see the monument's watchtowers and mighty bulk in all their pristine glory snaking off across the hills.

The Forbidden City is the Chinese imperial palace from the Ming dynasty to the end of the Qing dynasty. It is located in the center of Beijing, China, and now houses the Palace Museum. For almost 500 years, it served as the home of emperors and their households, as well as the ceremonial and political center of Chinese government.

The Summer Palace is a vast ensemble of lakes, gardens and palaces in Beijing, China. The Summer Palace is mainly dominated by Longevity Hill and the Kunming Lake. It covers an expanse of 2.9 square kilometres (720 acres), three-quarters of which is water.

The Temple of Heaven is a complex of religious buildings situated in the southeastern part of central Beijing. The complex was visited by the Emperors of the Ming and Qing dynasties for annual ceremonies of prayer to Heaven for good harvest. It has been regarded as a Taoist temple, although Chinese heaven worship, especially by the reigning monarch of the day, pre-dates Taoism.

Tiananmen Square is a large city square in the center of Beijing, China, named after the Tiananmen gate (Gate of Heavenly Peace) located to its North, separating it from the Forbidden City. Tiananmen Square is the fourth largest city square in the world

(440,000 m² – 880×500 m or 109 acres – 960×550 yd). It has great cultural significance as it was the site of several important events in Chinese history.
